章节摘录

插图：Another part of the job is to keep traffic moving in front of the hotel. A good hotel is often situated in a busy area. Many cars, buses, and taxis arrive and leave. An airport bus that moves and carries passengers or goods needs special help to park at the curb. Buses, trucks, automobiles, and taxis are vehicles.

An airplane is an airborne vehicle. Because there is often much luggage to unload from the bus, the doorman likes to make room for it at the curb in front of the hotel. If the bus can pull up to the curb, the doorman can put the baggage right on a handcart.

If the bus unloads the baggage out in the street, away from the curb, the doorman's work becomes harder. The doorman often tells people: "I'm a doorkeeper at the hotel, but I also open doors to all of the city for guests who stay at the hotel. My job is to help people get to the places they want to visit." He feels he can do his job better because he speaks and understands English. He's the first person guests see when they come to the hotel.
