章节摘录

Moving to college and adjusting to college life can be an overwhelming experience, specially if you havent been acquainted with the campus before. For those of you who are living on campus, after moving all of your belonging into the residence hall, you should try to make a personal tour around the campus. This will make for an easier transition on the first day of class. Be sure to make a list of places to find. For an instance, you will want to find where and when you can eat on the various places on campus. If applied, find out where you need to go to put money on your ID card. Many universities offer a plan to place money on the student ID card; you can spend that money on laundry, local food places, and even the bookstore. You should also go to the bookstore to find out what books you will need for your classes. During the first weekend which the students move in, remember that every student is in a same predicament and is adjusting to college dorm life just like you are. They dont have all of the answers, but they do have some. Compare notes with them. They may have already found the informations that you were looking for. Its also encouraged to find a new person on the floor and find ways to know them better, You might even want to go together to find various offices and what each office offers to the students at your university.
