章节摘录

Often students complain that the native speakers of English speak very fast -so fast that they find it difficult to follow. This may be true sometimes , especially when the native speaker is talking naturally to other native speakers. But more often than not the problem is that the students are unfamiliar with the rhythmic pattern of English. Some students of English try their best to pronounce every sound in word sclearly just as when they appear as individual words. If one speaks like this to native : speakers of English they can certainly understand you , but they would find it difficult to concentrate for long , as your spech sounds so unnatural. What is worse is that you will find yourself unable to follow a native speaker when he speaks naturally. You can catch the words that are said clearly but may mistake those sounds strung together for new words. This is the reason why we must learn the spech rhythms of English. ....
