systematicity , unidirectionality and partiality. It may fulfill one or more than one role among the following : structuring the target do-main concept , providing options to instantiate the target domain , providing bases for the reasoning and evaluating about the target do-main. It is noted that a conventional vehicle as the source domain can cognize a target domain conveniently and effortlessly. Metaphorical mapping is closely linked with the discourse it con-structs. A discourse in this book is regarded as a stretch of relatively formal language either in the written form or the spoken form to per-form a certain function among description , exposition , argumentation and narration in unity of cognition , linguistic form and context. A discourse can be a whole passage or part of it , even a huge book. In line with this definition of discourse , a metaphorical discourse is defined as a stretch of relatively formal language either in the writ-ten form or the spoken form governed by the influence of a single metaphor or multiple metaphors , either implicit or explicit , that makes a relatively independent whole to carry out a certain function among description , exposition , argumentation and narration , with some effects in unity of cognition , linguistic form and context. A metaphorical discourse has the following quali f ying factors : Firstly , metaphor in the discourse is restricted to its narrow senseie , based on similarity or similarities created by the metaphorical mapping , Secondly , the discourse is either in the written form or the spoken form. This is to extend to oral metaphors that occur in rela-tively formal speeches. Thirdly , it stops where the influence of a sin-gle metaphor or multiple metaphors can exert.
