章节摘录

插图：At 15:02, the first group of TV journalists gathered at the Beijing Capital Airport. While Premier Wen was on a plane to quake-stricken areas, at the same time Channel One and the News Channel of CCTV decided to start live broadcasts on the Wenchuan earthquake. Staff were immediately divided into several teams and quickly sent to work on every link for live broadcasts, while the headquarters were moved to the frontlines. At 15:20, live broadcasts replaced regular programming on the two channels, which for 24 hours covered only news about the earthquake. The scenes unfolded one after another: post-quake Wenchuan's catastrophic situation; ongoing rescue work; survivors being interviewed; and the latest death tolls and reports of collapsed schools and hospitals, mounting numbers of people found extremely difficult to digest.
