Benedetto Croce says, " All history is contemporary history. " Writing today ' s history is never easy. Nonetheless, we should face the challenge and seek lessons from contemporary history in order to be better prepared and to move forward towards the future. This book records the author Wei Jianguo ' s doings, experiences and thoughts in the 37 years from 1972 to 2008. Through Jianguo ' s memoir, readers see Africa ' s spectacular natural landscape, understand its pristine customs and traditions, learn of its rich history and geography, and become aware of numerous touching stories.

Based on his work experience, Wei Jianguo has extended his perspective to the entire history of New China ' s economic and trade relations with Africa from a unique point of view, with rich contents and in a straightforward style. Like a friendship envoy shuttling between the past and the present, he leads us to appreciate the skills of our colleagues working arduously in Africa, to see the profound friendship between the Chinese and African peoples, and to see the far-reaching significance of 60 years of remarkable achievements in comprehensive friendly Sino-African cooperation.

章节摘录

版权页： I grew up in Nanjing, known as "a city of mountains and forests" by the Yangtze River, and a city that offers resplendent natural scenery of hills and waters within its walls, and a graceful landscape of trees and springs in its busy streets. Speaking of the beautiful scenery in the province of Jiangsu where Nanjing is located would immediately call to mind the graceful Jinshan Mountain, the majestic Jiaoshan Mountain, and the Beigu Mountain, inspiration to generations of ancient poets. My dreams should have been set along a rolling river like the Yangtze, or in a town south of the Yangtze dotted with small bridges over a flowing river lined by charming houses or apricot blossoms in spring rain. As a teenager, I was confused by this Arab world that appeared in my dream. Although my rationalist world view prevented me from believing in superstitions, I could not help wondering if this dream had some meaning. It was a remarkable coincidence that, years later, I found myself in Casablanca, which bore a striking resemblance to the visions of my dream. I was filled with excitement, wondering if this was a destiny that had somehow been predetermined by fate. In any case, I made up my mind to pursue my career here and repay my hometown for its nurture and my country for its education, both of which had helped me mature into a capable man. To get to grips with the work at the Commercial Section as quickly as possible, I spent a lot of time familiarizing myself with the local economy, commerce, and trade, and with other local circumstances. I was mainly responsible for assisting my superiors in receiving guests and introducing to Morocco Chinese products and the Chinese Export Commodities Fair (Canton Fair). I also went out with my colleagues to do field work. As I progressed, my knowledge of the geography, economy and politics of Morocco, and the history of its ties with China, all grew steadily.
