<<20世纪中国的社会学本土化>>

内容概要

Sociological indigenization is discussed systematically from the perspectives of history and theory in this book. The authors retrospect and review the history of sociological indigenization in nearly 100 years in China and other places in the world, discuss the process and significance of Chinalization of sociology and Internationalization of Chinese sociology, and display the basic law of sociological discipline construction and development which the process of sociological indigenization implies. This book will help readers know more about the history of Chinese sociology and world sociology<sup>3</sup> and their interrelationship.

章节摘录

This book has the following characteristics : First , emphasizing on exploration and innovation. There are few books in China or worldwide researching on sociological indigenizations systematically . Indigenization of Chinese Sociology in the 20th Century may remedy the defect to some extent. In world sociological changing history , sociological indigenization took place in the spreading and communicating process across countries , regional and culture. Sociological indigenization movement appeared in late developing countries or areas from as early as 1920s to 1930s. Up to now , though foreign sociologists have probed into sociological indigenization , the study was not deep enough and lack of system , and the achievements taking sociological indigenization as their theme were rare. Chinese sociological circles has been focusing on sociological indigenization for 70 years , with some articles and important collections of essays published , which mainly concentrated on the emphasis of the necessity and significance of sociological indigenization and the tentative ideas of the outline pattern of sociological indigenization. Under this academic background , this book focus on sociological indigenization systematically researches the meanings , types , characteristics and relevant concepts of sociological indigenization ( see Chapter 1 ) , investigates historic and present sociological indigenization in terms of the world and China based on the large amount of materials ( see Chapter 2 , 3 , 4 ) , and probes into strategies for pushing sociological indigenization in China ( see Chapter 5 ) . We can say this is a creative and innovative research work. We are deeply aware of the dual characteristics that of this kind of work. On one hand , it has some academic value , i.e. ' a creative and innovative research work. It could contribute something new to this discipline academically.
