章节摘录

A grown-up person has ten or eleven pints (品脱) of blood in his or her body. We can lose a pint of blood without feeling anything, but if we lose a great deal of blood, we feel weak and cold, our faces become pale. We may die. This is what often happens when somebody is hurt in an accident or a soldier is wounded in a battle. Many people used to die in this way. But nowadays they can be taken to hospital. If they are given some blood at once, they will feel better. Their faces are no longer pale. They wont die. Where does this blood come from? People who are healthy give some blood so that it can be used in this way. Every three months they go to a place where blood is collected. A special kind of needle is put into the arm. It does not hurt. The blood runs through the needle and through a rubber tube into a bottle. A pint of blood is taken in this way. Then the person who has given blood drinks a cup of tea or coffee. He sits down to rest for a few minutes. Then he feels quite well and goes off. Three months later he comes back and gives an another pint. A person who gives blood in this way feels happy. He knows that his blood will be used to save someones life. Perhaps one day he himself will need blood. When you are older, you may decide to give blood in this way. But you can not do this until you are eighteen.
