章节摘录

Like many immigrants then and now , my mother knew that education was key. Early on , she would encourage me by saying , "You can be anything that you want to be in life." That meant that I could have a career , even though not many mothers pushed their daughters in that direction in those days. My mother , however , was also practical. When I was ready for college she told me , "Get your teachers license. You never know..." Four years later , I graduated from Hunter. I had taken her advice , kind of.. But first , I earned money by playing the clarinet , which was my passion. It was the thing I most wanted to do. Later on , when I changed careers , that same passion hung on. It transferred from music to photography and to writing childrens books. I write my books for young children. Why young children , you might ask ?

Because I'm touched by their innocence. And I have this insistent need to pass on the values that I hold dear. The oldest of my grandchildren —— Emi , Scott , Jake , Izzy and Livvie —— have all asked me at one time or another why I don't write for older kids —— what they call chapter books.
