章节摘录

版权页：插图： Master-of-nets Garden In Suzhou you can see many gardens. Most of them were built in the course of the last centuries by rich officials, merchants and landowners. Here great estate-owners enjoyed the advantages of city but still did not want to give up the country atmosphere. Merchants fulfilled their desire to own a plot of land in the country and were still within reach of the city's bustling activities. Historical sources revealed that during their heyday, the notable gardens in the city numbered 200. Villas of various sizes in the shape of different buildings, halls and pavilions stood in these gardens. They represented a small world of their own, in which all elements existing under the sun were supposed to be present. The builders tried their best to create a maximum number of landscapes within a limited space. The most important elements in the garden, as you are going to find out very soon, are ponds and mountains. Because Suzhou lies on the low ground, it is easy to install ponds. When you go to visit these gardens, you will frequently come across the so-called Taihu stones. They are bizarrely shaped rocks used singly or in piles to decorate the gardens. Taihu stones are of porous limestone, which usually come from the West Mountain Island in Taihu Lake. We simply throw the stones into the lake and have them exposed to water for several years. In this way, stones with bizarre shapes full of holes can be created. The gardens are supposed to reproduce a country as well as an urban atmosphere. Thus, pavilions, terraces, halls and towers are all parts of a typical Suzhou garden. You can also see bamboo plants, flowers and different kinds of trees. Usually the gardens are encircled by walls. In the inner walls there are moon-shaped and vase-shaped gates, polygonal openings and windows with imaginative latticework. Animals, mainly fish and song-birds, are also parts of the gardens. The gardens are supposed to create a poetic mood. Often they are the scene of the poets' competitions. So the builders not only had to be architects, but also painters and poets. Often, several people are engaged in the construction of one garden. In the past, many grounds were neglected during times of wars. Since the founding of new China, all efforts have been made to restore them.
