章节摘录

版权页：插图：services, they will be bound by the contract. This is SO even if the contract is not for the purchase of necessities or a beneficial contract of service. A : What is the voidable contract ?

B : A contract made with a minor that is not for necessities nor a beneficial contract of service may be voidable. At common law there are two types of contracts that fall into this category. First, contracts that will be binding on a minor during their majority unless repudiated by the minor during their minority or within a reasonable time of attaining their majority are voidable. To repudiate a contract means to reject it and to decide not to be bound by it. The second type of contracts are those not binding on the minor unless ratified by the minor within a reasonable time of attaining the age of majority. A : Would you mind explaining them one by one so that I can be better enlightened ?

B : All right. Contracts that fall into the first category are those involving continuing obligations. They are contracts of a permanent nature. A minor will be bound by these contracts unless specific steps are taken to repudiate the contract during their minority or within a reasonable time of attaining eighteen years. Generally, if a benefit has been obtained by the minor a refund of purchase money cannot be obtained. Contracts falling into the second category are those that are not of a continuing nature. These contracts will not bind a minor unless the minor ratifies the contract within a reasonable time of attaining the age of majority. A contract for the supply of goods that are not necessities would fall into this category.
