章节摘录

版权页：插图：In 1978, China's Gross Domestic Product (GDP) accounted for only one percent of world economy, whereas its share rose 5 percent in 2007, same year, China's share of global trade was less than 1 percent and share jumped to 8 percent. China's development has opened a huge market for international capital attracting about 780 billion dollars of net foreign investment over the last 3 decades. Direct overseas investment by Chinese companies had also grown substantially amounting to 21.16 billion US dollars in early 2006, in which, non financial investment was 17.63 billion USD (making up 83.3%) , an increase of 43.3% over 2005. China's development has boosted growth of global economy and trade. With imports growing at an average annual rate of 16.7 percent since 1978, it has become the world's third largest import market and Asia's top import market. China now contributes to more than 10 percent of global economic growth and more than 12 percent of global trade expansion. By the end of 2006, over 5,000 entities had established nearly 10 thousand enterprises in 172 countries and regions. The direct foreign investment had then also grown to an accumulated 90.63 billion USD among which non-financial amounted to 75.02 billion USD and financial amounted to 15.61 billion USD making up 82.8% and 17.2% of the investment overseas respectively.
