章节摘录

版权页：插图： Unperturbed by Yan Di's reluctance to enter the fray, Chi You fearlessly continued with his preparations for martial revenge: first, he gathered together seventy or eighty of his followers whose thirst for vengeance matched his own. He then decamped to try to muster the Miao people to his cause. The Miao were originally kin to the Yellow Emperor but had been discriminated against by him and were greatly angered at not being treated with the same respect as other races enjoyed. Most of them rallied to Chi You and eagerly joined his crusade to overthrow the Yellow Emperor's domination. In addition, the demons and monsters which resided in the southern mountains, woods, rivers and lakes all joined Chi You's forces without hesitation. They greatly resented the heavy control exerted by Shen Tu and Yu Lei, the two ghost leaders delegated by the Yellow Emperor to keep order in that region. Hence, under the nominal banner of the absent Yan Di, the vengeful Chi You started an uprising against the rule of the Yellow Emperor. He stood before a great army, vast and mighty: a powerful killing force. Hearing the news that Chi You had raised a great army in the southern Heavens determined to topple him, the Yellow Emperor, resting peacefully in the tranquility of his Heavenly palace on Kunlun Mountain, was greatly perturbed. The Emperor tried hard to negotiate a compromise and avoid warfare but the implacable Chi You was deaf to all pleas. Nothing but the clash of war would satisfy him. The armies met again on the battlefield of Zhuo Lu, the bones of the dead from the previous conflict between Yellow Emperor and Yan Di still littering the field.
