章节摘录

The men in the family are convinced it is all to do with race. Henrietta and her husband had migrated from the plantations of Virginia to the steelworks of Baltimore in the 1940s when war work had made the city a boom town. Their lives were disfigured by segregation at work and even at the hospital where Henrietta was kept in a ward for coloured women. Stories of white doctors using blacks as lab rats circulated around Turner Station , the Baltimore suburb where the Lacks family lived. Some of these rumours were true. The Tuskegee syphilis experiment was in full swing The progress of syphilis was studied among black men. Nothing wrong with that except that , by 1947 , penicillin had become the standard treatment for the disease and the experimenters withheld it from their subjects. Men died and children were born with congenital syphilis as a result , One of the great and terrible moments occurs in the Tuskegee Institute. While the syphilis study is going on in one part of the building , in another part ranks of black scientists are working desperately on HeLa to confirm the efficacy of Jonas Salks polio vaccine. These scientists were to be crucial to one of the greatest achievements of medical science.

I heard about Henrietta at school when a biology teacher wrote Lackss name on the blackboard. I asked him who she was , but all he knew was that she was black. From that moment on , I devoted myseff to uncovering the story.
