章节摘录

There are varied eating habits in our world. You can easily try different kinds of exotic foods in the neighborhood of where you live , but not until you get a chance to travel to other countries will you get to truly experience those different eating habits in person. As the old saying goes , "When in Rome , do as the Romans do." Learning more about different eating habits of other countries in advance will do you no harm. In the following , a few eating habits will be introduced to you as some examples. Most Eastern people mainly live on rice. In general , Asians eat rice almost every meal. When you go to Japan or Korea , you may find Japanese or Koreans eat as much rice as we Chinese do. In addition to rice , they eat noodles and dumplings as well. You can easily find something to your appetite when traveling in these two countries. When traveling in Southeast Asia , you might lose your appetite because of the hot weather. But dont worry. Their spicy and sour food will not let you down. Aside from that , you can always find a night market where you can enjoy different kinds of food at a time in most Asian countries. As for Westerners , eating habits differ in each country as well. A typical American breakfast includes cereal , toast or omelet. Fast foods such as hot dogs , burgers and sandwiches that you can also grab-and-go are popular. They are usually served with carbonated soft drinks. Steaks , mashed-potato and seafood can also be found on an Americans dining table. Most of the British wont ignore having a cup of morning tea after getting up from bed in order to get rid of their drowsiness. A traditional British breakfast has eggs , sausages , bacon and toast. British are dainty about afternoon tea in particular. Inviting friends to enjoy afternoon tea together is a common activity of their social life.
