章节摘录

版权页：插图：阅读理解 New words turn up in English all the time. Today, more new words and phrases are entering the language than ever before. "As our culture changes, the language changes," says John Algeo. He studies the history of language. "US culture is going through a time of rapid change," says Algeo. Technology is moving fast. That has a big impact (影响力) on language. The computer world produces hundreds of new words. New terms also come from business, medicine and other fields. Many new English words come from other languages. David Jost helps create the American Heritage (传统) Dictionary. "We constantly borrow words from other cultures," he says. "This will go on forever in cultures." "People in many parts of the world speak English now. That is another reason why so many new words are entering the language," says Algeo. The American Dialect Society has a contest each year. The society selects a "new word of the year". Last year's winner was "information superhighway". This phrase describes an electronic network of information. People get access (利用.....的权利) to the network by computer. New words often come in several forms. Over time, one form tends to win out. Many terms have been used to describe couples who live together but are not married. "Domestic (家庭的) partners" has been growing in favor (流行的) lately. "A new word rarely can be traced (追溯) to one source," says Algeo, "and several people tend to create a new word when a need for one exists." "Most new words have a limited life span (有限的寿限)," say language experts. Only a few will survive (幸存) through the next 100 years. 1. The passage mainly tells about _____. A. ways of new words entering English language B. English language is changing C. English language gains new words D. new words have a big impact on English language
