章节摘录

插图：In the traditional literary works and the folk custom of appellation, the relationship between brothers and sisters was usually used to express lovers' passionate affection and good wishes for having a happy marriage, just as a widespread folk song in China called Love Song of Lusheng sings, "Brothers and sisters have a deep affection, as if the plantain grows from one root..." In fact, it is a vivid description of the oldest custom that the kindred marriages within the same clan were divided according to generations. In such a family pattern, only the marriage of the linear relatives was excluded, like the marriage between an ancestor and his or her offspring, or a parent and his or her child. Brothers and sisters with the same parents and cousins were all viewed as brothers and sisters in the same generation, so, they were allowed to get married.
