章节摘录

My senior year of high school was an extremely hectic one , to say the least. If I wasn't studying and worrying about my grades , I was juggling multiple extracurricular activities or attempting to make sense of my plans for college. It seemed as if my life had turned into one crazy cloud of confusion and I was stumbling around blindly , hoping to find some sort of direction. Finally , as senior year began to wind down , I got a part-time job working at the local coffee shop , I had figured that the job would be easy and , for the most part , stress-free. I pictured myself pouring the best gourmet coffees , making delicious doughnuts , and becoming close friends with the regular customers. What I hadn't counted on were the people with enormous orders who chose to use the drive-thru window , or the women who felt that the coffee was much too creamy , or the men who wanted their iced coffees remade again and again until they reached a certain level of perfection. There were moments when I was exasperated with the human race as a whole , simply because I couldn't seem to please any-one. There was always too much sugar , too little ice , and not enough skim milk. Nevertheless , I kept at it.

One miserable rainy day , one of my regular customers came in looking depressed and defeated. My co-worker and I asked what the problem was and if we could help , but the customer wouldn't reveal any details. He just said he felt like crawling into bed , pulling the sheets up over his head , and staying there for a few years. I knew exactly how he felt. Before he left , I handed him a bag along with his iced coffee. He looked at me questioningly because he hadn't ordered anything but the coffee. He opened the bag and saw that I had given him his favorite type of doughnut. "It's on me , " I told him. "Have a nice day." He smiled and thanked me before turning around and heading back out into the rain. The next day was a horrible one. The rain was still spilling down from the sky in huge buckets and everyone in my town seemed to be using the drive-thru window because no one wanted to brave the black skies or the thunder and lightning.
