章节摘录

English people are always saying "please" , "thank you" and "sorry". I do , too. It is a habit. Nothing more. I think we all understand it. Anyway , there is very little harm in it. On the other hand , some people can get very worried if a foreigner forgets to say "please" when he is asking for something. Nowadays it is thought rather formal to shake hands if you are not on business. You can tell a great deal from the way people shake hands. Some people try to break your fingers. With others , it feels as if you are holding a wet fish. So the best kind of handshake is firm but gentle with a smile at the end of the arm. It is also worth remembering that people tend not to shake hands when parting nor if they have already met. Close friends or relatives may exchange a quick kiss on the cheek or lips when meeting or parting , but there is rarely any kissing or embracing between men. Men still tend to open doors for women in public. Some girls can't stand that , so nowadays you find more and more women opening doors for men. I like opening doors for anyone even myself.
