前言

The World Exposition Shanghai China 2010 is yet another mega event hosted by China following the Beijing Olympics. It attracts the greatest number of participants in the history of the World Exposition. By March 25, 2010, 242 countries and international organizations have confirmed their participation. The Expo is themed on "Better City, Better Life", the first time for a World Exposition to focus on the issue of city. Centering around the theme, participants from all over the world will stage exhibitions, events and forums to discuss the development of cities, offer their visions for the future, and promote understanding, communication and cooperation between nations and between cultures. Expo 2010 is to be held in a downtown area between Nanpu Bridge and Lupu Bridge along Huangpu River. It has a total area of 5.28 square kilometers, and tickets are required for admission to the enclosed area of 3.28 square kilometers. Out of the five zones in the enclosed area, Zones A, B and C are in Pudong, and D and E in Puxi. Exhibitions, events and forums are three core components of the Expo. Theme pavilions, national pavilions, pavilions of international organizations and corporate pavilions are built by the Expo Organizer or participants who will stage exhibitions in these buildings based on their own cultural background and exploration of the theme. During the Expo, about 20,000 performances will be given. These amazing events, sponsored by the Organizer or participants, also provide interesting interpretations of the theme. Forums, which deal with the Expo theme most directly, are always a central part of Expo legacy and an important platform to look into the future. A Summit Forum together with a series of theme forums and public forums were and will be staged before or after the opening ceremony of Expo 2010. Besides these core components, Expo 2010 also introduces, for the first time in the history of the World Exposition, two great innovations, i.e., UBPA and Expo Shanghai Online. Expo 2010 is expected to produce a positive effect in the development of the world's cities and contribute greatly to the sustainable development of human societies. Let's wish Expo 2010 Shanghai China a great success.

章节摘录

插图：Expo 2010 has five theme pavilions, namely, Urbanian, City Being, Urban Planet, Footprint and Future. They are the core pavilions in developing the theme "Better City, Better Life". By employing state-of-the-art exhibition technologies and in a visually compelling way, exhibitions in these pavilions show humanity, the city and the earth as an organic whole, and reveal the keys in bringing a better city and better life. Urbanian Pavilion, Pavilion of City Being and Pavilion of Urban Planet are housed in the Theme Pavilion building in Zone B. Designers of the building, one of the Expo landmarks, have found inspiration in paper folding. As an attractive design feature, the roof imitates the dormer window that is often seen in Shikumen houses (an authentically Shanghai architectural style). The western exhibition hall, spanning 180 meters north-south and 126 meters east-west, does not use a single column. During the Expo, a wide range of events and ceremonies are held in the building's three squares. The other two pavilions, Footprint and Future, are located in two modified industrial buildings in Zone D and Zone E respectively; they represent a careful consideration of environment protection and a fascinating mix of tradition and modernity.
