Employment of Women, Youth and Disabled People

The Chinese government has always been highly concerned about and placed great importance on the employment of women, youth and disabled people, providing legal guarantees for equal employment for men and women, and actively adopting preferential policies for protecting employment of the disabled. Guaranteeing womens right to equal employment

The Constitution of the PRC, the Labour Law of the PRC, and the Law of the PRC on Safeguarding Womens Rights and Interests all contain special provisions for safeguarding womens right to employment. The state protects womens equal right with men to work, eliminates sexual discrimination in employment, adopts the principle of equal pay for equal work for both sexes, and guarantees special labour protection for women employees during menstruation, pregnancy, confinement and nursing.

In May 2001, the Chinese government promulgated "The Programme for the Development of Chinese Women (2001—2010) ", which set the goal of promoting womens employment. With the countrys sustained, rapid economic growth, and the development of industries and trades suitable for womens employment, the female population in employment has continuously grown, and the fields of employment for them have kept expanding. The female population in employment in Chinas urban and rural areas increased from 291 million in 1990 to 337 million in 2003.

Today, there are 41.56 million women employees in urban units, accounting for 38 per cent of the total employees in urban units. As the Chinese government pushes ahead with the reform of the economic system and the readjustment of the economic structure, a number of women workers have been laid off. To support the reemployment of laid-off women, especially older women, governments at all levels have actively developed and expanded trades and fields suitable for women to work in, and have adopted more flexible forms of employment to provide them with job opportunities according to their needs.

Government-run public job agencies provide laid-off and unemployed women gratis with consultancy on policy matters, job vacancy information, vocational guidance and job referral services, and actively carry out vocational skill training for them. From 1998 to 2003, of a total of 13.36 million laid-off and unemployed women, 9.72 million started their own businesses or found new jobs.

The government supports womens federations in their work of helping women to start their own businesses or get reemployed. From 1998 to 2003, womens federations at various levels held training sessions for 5.8 million laid-off or unemployed women, and directly helped 2.5 million women to find new jobs. The government has established a maternity insurance scheme, with the premiums paid for by enterprises, instead of individual employees. This has created a favourable environment for women to participate equally in competition for employment.
