章节摘录

It is wrong to suggest , as some have , that I would be so callous as to advocate the immediateremoval of thousands of TANF recipients ; to do so only spreads fear among recipients instead of advancing a solution. But I am firmly committed to a five-year limitation , with exemptions for tho se who face severe barriers to employment — as long as it is part of a full-scale program redesign. For real transformation to take place , the mayor and the D.C. Council must rapidly change our system to include participation from every city agency , as well as the private sector , and employtheir collective expertise and resources to help beneficiaries change their lives.

To begin , we can act immediately to improve the delivery of job training services to 10 , 600families deemed "ready to work". Our six existing job training vendors receive a bonus for work placement and retention , but they provide services to only 6 , 900 families. Consequently , tho usands of families face one- to-two-year waiting periods for training. Rather than terminating these contracts because they have not met the recipients' needs , the Department of Human Services has allowed the contracts to continue. Why would the Fentyadministration make sanctions for noncompliance by individuals receiving benefits a priority instead of increasing the capacity of job training and education programs administered by these contractors ?

It is only now , years after the problems became apparent , that DHS has a plan to prepare new requirements and solicit new vendors.
