内容概要

“ What is the first thing that a baby does when it comes into the world ?

” Sarah Lu asks in one of the beginning lessons of her new language manual entitled Mandarin Hip Hop . The baby cries . And with that very first cry , the newborn begins to communicate and establishes bonds with the people who are nearby rejoicing at that piercing squeal . And , soon to follow that cry will be the baby ' S first giggle and laugh . an expansion of its sound repertoire with which it expresses its needs , fears and happiness . With more giggles and cries , a child mimics the adults , experimenting with various strange sounds and associating them with things and deeds in the sound . ing world . A mother tongue begins as a foreign language , a speech that a child learns through im . itations and repetitions . The learning is never short of challenges , but each challenge is surely to come with fun and appreciation . Fun invites participation and fun promises gratification . No fun , no gain . Fun is indeed the key that characterizes Sarah ' S philosophy in teaching and learning Chinese . a language whose graphic and tonal complexities are often found to be an ultimate challenge to linguistic sophistication . As her book title indicates , Sarah teaches through chants and songs in the language manual . Children have a natural inclination for music . With its rhythmic flow from word to word , language readily translates into music . Sarah makes a special effort to evoke that musicality in speech and turns it into a source of motivation and enjoyment in language learning.
