章节摘录

As is mentioned earlier, a second important dimension of rhetorically effective RA is the writer's credibility, ethos not only in terms of classical rhetoric but also seen from the perspective of socially or collectively constructed knowledge. Credibility thus may mean a lot in the context of research article writing: competence, confidence, authority, honesty, humility and perhaps amicability. Almost all metadiscourse features have to do with a suitable disciplinary ethos while hedges, boosters' evidentials, self-mentions and engagement markers do most of the job. Hedges and boosters serve as two edges of one sword. Circumspection plus uncertainty represented by hedges and priority plus solidarity represented by boosters may both lead to the convincing value of the writers' statements. What matters is how to manage a balance between these two interactional devices.

Hedges are abundantly deployed throughout the whole IMRC structure of research articles while the Discussion sections are relatively haunted with more (cf. Hyland, 1996a, 1996b, 1997, 1998b). This reinforces Myers's (1989) contention that most hedging occurs in Discussion sections of research articles because it is here that the RA writers need to show commitment while leaving open the possibility of being mistaken. In the similar vein Salager-Meyer (1994) sums up the distribution of vague expressions and other hedging strategies as being clustered in the Introduction and Discussion sections.
