章节摘录

Our planet isn't in very good shape right now. The air is polluted. The ocean is becoming plastic soup. We're in a financial crisis. Things don't seem to be looking too good, huh ?

There are a lot of people, who have a lot of answers. Everyone thinks their answer is right. We need cleaner, natural sources for energy. We need biodegradable products that if dumped, will simply disintegrate within a few weeks. As far as the financial crisis goes, that's a little trickier. Some people say we need more regulation. Others say we need more jobs. Others still say the cost of living is increasing too fast for our incomes to keep up.

Everyone has answers. The problem is none of these answers address the fundamental problem: We don't need to do anything about it. No, I didn't stutter. The answer isn't in better solutions, fixes and different angles. The answer is... we need to do less. There's a fundamental rule in physics that says energy cannot be created or destroyed and it can only be transformed. I'm sure you're familiar with this; we all learned it in school. And the same rule applies to everything in life, but I guess we didn't listen very well. See, the problem we're in this big mess is really simple. It may seem like there's so much we need to do, to make things right. And that's the problem. We don't need to do more. We don't need to make more of an effort. We need to do less. ....
