章节摘录

Paying for goods supplied in domestic trade is a fairly simple matter because payment can be made either in advance or within a reasonable short period after delivery. But this problem is much more complicated in foreign trade. Must the seller wait perhaps several months for his money or shall the buyer pay several months in advance before seeing his goods ?

Clearly, the seller runs certain risks of non-payment if he surrenders goods before payment has been made. As it is not always possible for the seller personally to collect payment before delivery, the appointment of agents for this purpose in the importer's countries becomes necessary. This function is usually entrusted to the bank, who has branches or correspondent banks in most towns or cities overseas. The most generally used method of payment in the financing of international trade is the letter of credit ( abbreviated to L/C ), which is a reliable and safe method of payment, facilitating trade with unknown buyers and giving protection to both sellers and buyers. The process of issuing a letter of credit starts with the buyer. He instructs his bank to issue an L/C in favor of the seller for the amount of purchase. The buyer's bank ( the opening bank ) sends to its correspondent bank in the seller's country the L/C, giving instructions about the amount of the credit, the beneficiary, the currency, the documents required and other special instructions. The correspondent bank advises the seller of the receipt of the credit. Sometimes a seller requires a confirmed L/C. In this case, the correspondent bank usually adds its confirmation, and advises the seller of the same; the seller will then dispatch the goods accordingly. ....
