章节摘录

Firms must satisfy customers, or the customers won't continue to "vote" for the firm's survival and success with their money. But firms must also keep in mind that sales revenue from customers comes at a cost. It may cost more to satisfy some needs than any customer is willing to pay. So profit—the difference between a firm's revenue and its total costs—is the bottom-line measure of the firm's success and ability to survive. It is the balancing point that helps the firm determine what needs it will try to satisfy with its total sometimes costly effort.

Macro-Marketing and Micro-Marketing Defined Macro-marketing is a social process that directs an economy's flow of goods and services from producers to consumers in a way that effectively matches supply and demand and that accomplishes the objectives of society. Emphasis is on the whole system. Like micro-marketing, macro-marketing is concerned with the flow of need-satisfying goods and services from producers to consumers. However, the emphasis with macro-marketing is not on the activities of individual organizations. Instead, the emphasis is on how the whole marketing system works, which involves looking at how marketing affects society, and vice versa. Every society needs a macro-marketing system to help match supply and demand. Different producers in a society have different objectives, resources, and skills. Likewise, not all consumers share the same needs, preferences, and wealth. In other words, within every society there are both heterogeneous supply capabilities and heterogeneous demands for goods and services.
