章节摘录

What Should You Ask About Your Child's Prescription? First, be sure it is really necessary, says Wooltorton. "A lot of children don't always need prescriptions for a lot of things. Ear infections are an example of when antibiotics are sometimes, but not always, necessary. But there is a tendency in our society to want our kids to be like us. We want to get back to work. We want them to get back to school. We want a quick fix. But how will we know the drug is working?"

A child with asthma, for example, is usually given a couple of medications. One will be to open the airways. He should feel better after the first dose. If he doesn't, we have a problem. The other medication is used to reduce inflammation. This will decrease the number of acute breathless episodes, but it takes time to have an effect." Find out how long your physician has been using the drug, says Rieder, and what the experience has been like. Your doctor may know quite a lot about the drug, even if it is being used off-label. What Should Parents Watch Out for?

Dr. Michael Kramer, of the Canadian Institutes of Health Research, says you should contact your physician "if your child is very sleepy or is agitated and unable to sleep. You should also be concerned about any rashes that cause blistering or hives." When you pick up a medication at the drugstore, it often comes with a list of potential side effects. Maura MacPhee, who teaches in the School of Nursing at the University of British Columbia, says, "this is generic information. Before leaving the physician's office, make sure you know what side effects are the ones you need to worry about with your child." How Safe Is the System?

In the last 25 to 30 years, we have seen significant advances in the treatment of childhood leukemia. "When I was training 30 years ago," says Daneman, "childhood leukemia had an 80-percent mortality rate; now the survival rate is better than 80 percent." Another important development: More drugs are being tested now in children. Daneman says: "if you look at the number of studies that go on, there are many more in the last five to eight years than there were 20 or 30 years ago." 1. Which of the following is requested by Health Canada before it permits a drug to be sold?

A) The size and the weight of the drug. B) The suggested price of the drug. C) The results of clinical trials of the drug. D) The production budget of the drug. 2. Who is seen by Dr. Denis Daneman as a highly vulnerable group?

A) Pregnant women. B) Children. C) Elderly people over 70. D) Middle-aged men.

3. How many kinds of drugs are now used by children off-label?

A) 840. B) 60. C) 1400. D) 560. 4. Depo Provera is a drug that can result in adolescents ____. A) stomach upset B) low blood pressure C) high cholesterol D) decreased bone density

5. Some minor and long-term side effects were not reported due to ____. A) patients ignorance B) lack of financial incentive C) doctors irresponsibility D) shortage of health workers
