内容概要

很喜歡這輯詩，有你生活其中的澳門，有旅途中的異國，你敏感的文字、細膩的觀察，偶然流露的幽默，有時帶點天真，有時有點無奈，卻是睜大眼睛觀看，常常從靜思中捕捉了出色的意象，成為令人印象深刻的詩句。

--- 也斯（梁秉鈞）

In his new collection, Chris Song Zijiang strolls from Guangdong to Bundanon and kindly invites us to join him. Song has a keen eye for the extraordinary in the ordinary -- from the philosopher wombat who knows the danger in Plato better than many who have read him, who, like Socrates “ delved in the sky and / under the earth ” and ended “ hoping to // scratch the truth out of his body, ” to a moment of waiting with a taxi driver on the way to the Chinatown of Sydney “ for the next word / that won ’ t be said, ” to an “ odd nail / still wedged in the wall, ” to reading Heraclitus on Hac Sa Beach, “ the same as ever / but never the same twice. ” This clear-eyed poet knows “ legs / bring seeds / wherever they go... // so sojourns all / become grass huts. ” This is a hut (like the one another stroller, Henry David Thoreau, built on Walden Pond) worth inhabiting for a while, oozing “ a sense / out of no sense ” with Mina Loy, full of promise. Strolling is a joy to read, and it will leave readers waiting for the next word, hoping that sharp something sticking in the poet ’ s throat at the end means another long walk soon, sowing silences as breathtaking as those in this collection. --- Steven Schroeder
